

My Dreamy Old Husband Chapter 766

Upon seeing the scene before her, Sophia frowned.

In embarrassment, Stanley hugged Carmen with an awkward smile. "Hehe... hehe... This is my uncle's daughter."

Sean felt embarrassed as well when Cooper explained the situation with a long face.

Sophia was stunned when she was told about the truth. Carmen is actually not their daughter which they picked up from the rubbish bin!

Although they had cleared up the misunderstanding, the image of Stanley and Sean as a gay couple had left a deep impression on her.

Of course, her blind date with Stanley would never progress further.

"Let's go," Cooper said to Sophia.

Since the host would be leaving soon, it would be inconvenient for the guests to stay. Cooper was back, so there would be more chances for them to meet again anyway.

Upon looking at Cooper's daughter, who was treasured by him, Sean had a lump in his throat. If only Sophia is still alive...

On the other hand, Stanley kept staring at Lucile when he noticed that Judge and Corrado obediently followed her as if they had known her for a long time. "Hmm, these dogs are acting weird..."

Corrado, who had always been cold toward people, was never amiable to anyone. It was the first time today that he became close to someone whom he met for the first time.

Linus' car was already parked outside as the group of people exited the house. When Linus saw Stanley and Sean leaving with Carmen, he finally poked his head out from the driver's seat and greeted, "Long time no see."

Upon noticing Linus, Stanley proudly turned his head away while Sean returned the greeting.

Linus had once partnered with Phantom Wolf. Years ago, when Michael tried to seek Linus' cooperation to save Sophia, he was unable to contact the latter.

Stanley had suspected that Linus intentionally did that—up until now.

If they had been able to contact Linus at that time, perhaps they would have been able to find Cooper. Cooper would have been able to meet his daughter, Sophia, and she would not...

Knowing about Stanley's resentment toward him, Linus did not press further.

When they exited their house, they saw the Edwards and West Families making a scene outside—they bawled, scolded and begged for forgiveness. However, if Sarah and Harry continued to refuse to come out, the situation could escalate even further.

As the 9th Old Master Edwards, Sam had long known about the incident that involved the West and minor Edwards Families. Although he did not know what happened in the middle, all he knew was that Cooper took action.

Since it was Cooper, he must have had his reasons for doing so. Although Sam did not ask or intervene, as the 9th Old Master Edwards, he needed to step forward and take a look at the commotion.

Upon seeing Sam, someone from the minor Edwards Family, who had gone bankrupt, swarmed around him as if they saw their savior.

Sophia knew what the commotion was all about—she had known earlier that Cooper attacked the Edwards and West Families during that period of time, but the face that was hidden underneath the bandage was cold and indifferent.

"Darling, let's go," Cooper reminded again.

However, she suddenly answered, "Dad, I would like to watch the commotion."

Upon looking at her, he had a feeling that his obedient child was different from the child she had been a few days ago. Yet, he had no choice but to accompany her to watch the show.

They then headed in the direction of Villa No. 6. Sean and Stanley quickly followed behind them to see what all the fuss was about.

Meanwhile, Michael, who was outside walking the dog and looking for his daughter, immediately spotted Stanley, who carried Carmen in his arms. A smile instantly appeared on Michael's cold face.

"Daddy!" Carmen called out to him in her crisp voice. Stanley then put her down before she dashed toward Michael.

Her voice attracted Sophia's attention. Her gaze followed Carmen and landed on the man with white hair.

The man was wearing a mask and the pale color of his hair reflected his extreme sorrow. Upon hearing Carmen's voice, he squatted with gentle eyes as he looked at her. Happiness filled his eyes when he watched his daughter pouncing at him like a little butterfly, which resembled Cooper's happiness when he looked at Sophia.

This must be Carmen's father... He doesn't seem old. I wonder what sort of suffering he has endured to have caused his hair to turn white.

After her gaze was attracted by the man with white hair, she subconsciously slowed down in her pace and felt a sudden inexplicable grief growing within her.

"Darling, where did you go and play?" Michael's voice was especially gentle.

Upon hearing his voice, Sophia suddenly came to a stop. That voice sounds extremely familiar—as if I have heard it in my dreams or from my past life.

Carmen turned her head to look at Sophia while replying in a sweet voice, "I went to play with Lucile. We wore clothes for Judge together and Corrado tried to bite her, but I bravely protected her!" She sounded particularly proud and excited.

As Michael raised his head, he saw Judge's awkward gait as he wore two pairs of tiny shoes on his feet.

Sam and his dog were there as well.

Before he managed to notice the rest, the two dogs that he was walking suddenly dashed in a certain direction while struggling in excitement. The moment he released the leashes, the two dogs raced toward that direction.

It was March and the sun had finally peaked from the clouds. Michael raised his eyes and the dazzling sun momentarily blinded him. When the darkness dispersed, he saw a young lady gently squatting under the brilliant sunlight. He could not see her face, but her figure was stunning in such a way that it was enchanting.

“Bubbles, you are a girl. You need to be more reserved!”

He watched as the lady stooped down to pet Bubbles, the poodle. Her voice was tender to its core.

The voice pierced through his eardrums, which made him feel as if some solid ice had been smashed into pieces. Warm sunlight finally reached the most tender area, buried deep within his frozen heart.

Some past memories suddenly become incredibly vivid at that moment.

“Hubby, Bubbles is a girl. You need to treat her gentler!”

“Don’t be deceived by her strong appearance. She is a girl!”

...

Thump. Thump.

Michael’s heartbeat uncontrollably raced. Blood rushed into his brain and to his limbs, causing him to feel that all of his senses had suddenly heightened.

He could smell that there was a familiar scent in the air that sank deep in his soul.

The face of the lady before his eyes slowly overlapped with the face of the girl who would never appear again until they became one.

He fell into a fleeting daze before using his fastest speed to regain his usual composure.

His gaze landed again on the girl. She seemed to be happy as she petted the dogs, but Cooper, who was beside her, looked unhappy. Linus picked up the leashes and handed them to Michael.

Michael's gaze then turned to Linus. From Linus' expression, he seemed to have something to say while walking toward Michael, but did not have a chance to voice his thoughts. At that moment, Michael seemed to realize something as immense happiness bloomed in his heart before being replaced by a deep heartache.

His hands started to tremble to the point where he could not even hold onto the leashes. Cooper's daughter, Lucile, fancied Carmen, their cats and dogs, and the dramas that only Sophia loved. I should have realized it earlier...