

Life at The Top – Chapter 1545

At this moment, the report came again, this time more intense than before.

“There is an empty order!”

“There are more than 100 million US Dollars... 10... No, 20... No, no, more! It's so densely packed. They are all 100 million US Dollars capped empty orders, Oh my god! What is happening? Is there something wrong with the security server?”

“It's JW Foundation! Hurry, record, and analyze the data! JW Foundation is continuing to short the Layman stock!”

“All buy orders were smashed by JW Foundation's sell orders!”

“JW Foundation is hammering the market!”

Frightened screams blasted across the entire conference room. Meanwhile, Dugg, who was talking to Everson with a cigar and a smile on his face in one second, suddenly got up the next. His blue eyes set in deep sunken eye sockets stared at the screen.

At this moment, the massive amount of data on the screen was like a tsunami as huge as a mountain. The big negative line that represented Layman's stock price had just recovered slightly because of the intervention of the Quantum Fund. At this moment, it seemed as if there was an invisible knife slashing the index that had just been lifted slightly. It was now dragging it into the abyss!

"That bastard! That damn cunning monkey! Are we really going to start a big battle?"

Dugg's angry roar echoed throughout the conference room.

As far as most people understood, the two armies would not be overly boisterous when fighting, instead, they would carefully test the water to understand each other's bottom line and strength. Finally, they would target a specific date to start a decisive battle. This was how a normal person understood the war.

This time, the Dow Jones Index, which had swept across the global financial world, was the battleground of the Wall Street Consortium and JW Foundation, whom represented Somerland capital. This decisive battle between the two had come way faster than expected.

With a volume of 100 billion US Dollars, the capital raised by both parties was at least 300 billion US Dollars.

This was just the direct impact. The number of funds that were indirectly impacted was simply incalculable. Government and private financial institutions around the world, regardless of their position or actual ability were almost all gearing up to stare at the changes in the Dow Jones Index.

They looked forward to this battle but feared it at the same time. They feared that it was likely to ruin the jobs of countless people and make countless billionaires instantly bankrupt. It was also likely to change the global financial situation.

On the other hand, they were also looking forward to this huge change. In change lied opportunity. The bigger the change, the more opportunities it presented.

Everyone wanted to benefit from it!

For economists, this unprecedented financial war was likely to expose many flaws in the modern financial and economic system that could not be found during ordinary periods.

Some extreme conditions that could previously only be theorized were also likely to be truly revealed in this great war.

Additionally, when these countless deductions and hypotheses played out in reality, it would truly show people what they saying 'plans cannot keep up with change' meant.

This decisive battle began on the second day. This was something that even the most daring person would not have guessed before it actually happened.
