

A Cue for Love Chapter 719

Chapter 719 Intention

Yara was shocked, for she thought that Samuel knew who gave birth to Franklin and Sophia at about the same time as Kenneth.

When Yara wanted to touch Samuel, he rudely flung her hand away. "I also know what you did to Nat. However, I didn't do anything to you because of Grandpa. Whether you were sincere or not, you did take care of Grandpa very well. However, I'm not interested in you at all!"

Yara always thought she had lowered her dignity too much because of loving Samuel. Nonetheless, she felt a lump in her throat upon listening to Samuel's cruel remark.

"Would you take a look at me in the past five years if Grandpa didn't like me?" Yara couldn't help but ask Samuel even though she roughly knew the answer.

"No," Samuel said while casting a sideways glance at Yara.

Then, Samuel warned Yara, "Don't harm Nat. Also, don't let me catch you in action."

With that, Samuel turned around and left the mourning hall.

Yara went weak at the knees and collapsed. Nevertheless, she clutched her phone forcefully as though she wanted to break it into pieces.

The next moment, tears uncontrollably streamed down Yara's face. I can't stop it... Did I hurt her or the other way round? I won't become who I am today if she doesn't exist! Anyway, her reputation will go to the dogs within days. By then, she will have nothing and might even go to prison!

Samuel, you can resist your family for her, but can you confront the whole world? We'll wait and see!

Deep in Yara's heart, she wanted Natalie to feel her pain.

When Ross was in the laboratory, he felt his eyelids get heavier, for he almost fell asleep. He quickly shook his head to stay awake.

He looked up and saw that Natalie was still focusing on the experiment as if she wouldn't get tired at all.

"Ms. Nichols, you—"

"Get some sleep if you're too tired. You can continue after that," Natalie murmured without lifting her head.

"I..." Realizing that it wasn't appropriate to slack off at the critical moment, Ross tried his best to stay awake.

After working day and night, they finally extracted two new elements of medicine at midnight on the fourth day.

One of them was a hallucinogen extracted from Melissa's blood.

The other was an element that could speed up the spread of cancer cells from the dead patients' blood.

Compared to ordinary drugs that would lead to addiction, the new hallucinogen could make one feel on cloud nine without getting addicted to it. Besides, others could control the minds of those who consumed the hallucinogen with hypnosis.

Patients who consumed the second element would die due to cancer without any pre-existing signs. Even a pathologist could only conclude that their deaths were accidents after undergoing autopsies, for there was no trace of drugs.

Natalie and Ross were deep in thought as they read the report.

After a while, Natalie couldn't help but ask, "Tell me. What do you think?"

While thinking about the experimental mouse, Ross said with a grim expression, "One could neither invent the new medicines overnight nor do it alone. These two medicines don't seem to be made to generate profit. Instead, they can be used as powerful weapons by some underground organizations. The first medicine can help create zombies, while the second is perfect for assassination.”

What Ross said was in line with Natalie’s thoughts.

Natalie nodded and said, “The mastermind knew that I would figure it out sooner or later. Hence, they used the medicines against me to bring me down. They wished to ensure that I could never challenge their positions, just like my granddad and mom in the past!”

Until then, Natalie finally understood her mother’s intention of leaving the letter for her.

A Cue for Love Chapter 720

Chapter 720 A Parasitic Relationship

Upon hearing that, Ross pressed his lips into a thin line even as the furrow of his brows deepened further.

Such a drug is exceedingly dangerous and lethal regardless of the industry it’s used in.

“What should we do next, Ms. Nichols?”

Natalie’s eyes narrowed a fraction, and she murmured placidly, “It’s arduous to pull out roots embedded deep in the ground, but we must remove all the exposed stems and leaves in order to save Dream this time. The press conference this time is our chance to make a comeback!”

“Understood!”

Although they already obtained the research results, neither Ross nor Natalie slept a wink that night.

At dawn, Natalie stood in the pantry and brewed herself a cup of coffee without sugar. As she gazed at the rays of sunlight that seeped in through the window, Natalie sipped at the coffee in the cup, but her thoughts had drifted a thousand miles away.

Did Granddad once face the same dilemma as me? Earlier, Ross and I only discussed the lethality of those new drugs, but we haven't had the time to talk about how much R&D effort, test samples, and clinical trials will be required to develop such efficacy. It turned out that the dark forces I postulated are living off Dexmed Pharmaceutical through a parasitic relationship in such a manner.

When she finished the coffee and placed the cup into the basin, a glint of determination flashed across her eyes. Regardless of the path ahead, my decision is the same as Granddad's!

It was then forty minutes past nine. There were still twenty minutes left before the press conference began officially.

Nonetheless, the hall was already all set with dozens of photography equipment lined up at the back of the hall, facing the rostrum and the panel. The authoritative media outlets and journalists from Dellmoor and Chanaea were all gearing up for the interview session after the press conference.

After all, other than celebrity gossip, Dream's special medicine case also received tremendous attention in the community news segment at present.

Thomas had just ended his phone call with Yeva when he spotted Yara entering the VIP lounge.

"Dad, the press conference is going to commence soon, right? Why are you still on the phone?" Yara frowned deeply, chagrined at the man for making a phone call when the press conference was going to begin. Right now, there's nothing more important than holding the press conference!

Chuckling dryly, Thomas fibbed, "It was just a telemarketing call. I hung up after admonishing the person for a bit."

Was it really just a telemarketing call? Yara's eyes narrowed into slits. The moment I walked in, I obviously glimpsed a smile in his eyes. But since he said so, I can't cling to this trivial topic and continue pursuing the matter.

"Dad, it's going to be an exceedingly crucial moment later. Also, your tie is crooked." She stepped forward and adjusted his tie as she spoke, "Are you sure you have made all the necessary arrangements on your side and everything is foolproof? There can't be any mistakes today."

"Don't worry. I'll never jeopardize things at such a critical juncture."

"I'm glad to hear that."

When Yara was done righting Thomas' tie, she checked her makeup in the mirror.

I must finish this comeback battle beautifully in this press conference today! As for that sister of mine, well, she can enjoy the taste of failure!

"Yara, Dexmed Pharmaceutical will start acquiring Dream after this press conference. The acquisition won't be easy, but I have high hopes for you." Thomas was fantasizing about the future and pinned his hopes on Yara.

"No problem! I won't disappoint you, Dad!" Yara beamed at him.

When I acquire Dream, I'll remove everyone who supports Natalie, including Yandel, Ross, and Lia, as though I'm pulling weeds!

Right then, a commotion broke out at the press conference.

"Samuel Bowers is here!"

"Why is he here? I don't think Centurion Corporation has directly collaborated with or invested in pharmaceutical companies!"

"I don't know. I can't figure out why he would attend such an event."

All the journalists were at a loss, but still, they held up their cameras and snapped away at Samuel.

"Yara, why is Samuel here?" Worry inundated Thomas, and a frown marred his countenance.