

Zeke was somewhat frustrated.

Ruby had been looking down on him ever since he was in school and had even accused him of stealing from his classmates.

Unexpectedly, she still held such a harsh prejudice against him after so many years.

Flustered, Summer hurriedly defended him. "Mom, what are you talking about? Zeke just took his twin brother's place in jail, which means he's innocent."

"Ha, so what if he's innocent?" Ruby said indifferently. "Back then, he and Hudson were the poorest students in the school who even stole from their classmates. This kind of person has questionable character and is destined to be a loser forever. I don't want you, my daughter, to live like a loser forever. Meanwhile, Charlie is so much better than Zeke is in all aspects. Anyway, you can only marry Charlie as long as I live."

"It's now the age of freedom of marriage, Mom. You're breaking the law by arranging my marriage," Summer retorted.

"Cut it out." Ruby was fuming with anger. "How can you accuse your own mother of committing a crime! You're my daughter, so you have to listen to me in everything. It's all for your own good!"

With eyes welling up with tears, Summer asked, "Why do you insist on me marrying that Humpty?"

What did he give you in return?"

Humpty said with a smile, "Summer, I don't know if Ruby told you, but I've actually won the contract for the hospital cafeteria. I know Ruby has been wanting to rent a buttery hatch at the hospital cafeteria, and I can easily help her get it. By selling food at the hospital cafeteria, not only will she make more money, but she also won't have to be exposed to wind and rain."

The surrounding vendors also gathered around upon hearing his words.

"Damn, so it turns out the hospital cafeteria has been contracted to Charlie."

"Everyone knows that a buttery hatch at the hospital cafeteria can get a monthly revenue of at least thirty thousand due to its high traffic."

"Besides, people working there are considered permanent hospital workers with social insurances who will get a pension after retirement."

"By having such a capable son-in-law, Ruby can surely live in comfort from now on."

"Charlie, can you rent me a buttery hatch? I can pay you more a higher rental."

With an arrogant look, Humpty shot Zeke a provocative glance that seemed to say 'Can you compete with me?'.

Zeke couldn't believe his eyes.

Is that it?

You actually have the audacity to compete with me with this little capital?

This entire hospital belongs to me, and yet you're flaunting my hospital cafeteria in front of me. Are you serious?

Zeke chuckled, "As far as I know, there are still several buttery hatches available in the hospital cafeteria. Anyone can rent it as long as one has a health certificate and comply with food safety standards."

"Ha, what do you know? Connections are everything in the current society!" Humpty sneered. "Someone once gave me two hundred thousand bucks for a buttery hatch, but I turned it down! Besides, Ruby doesn't need any health certificate to sell food there, as I can get her in with just a word."

Delighted, Ruby said, "I'm counting on you, Charlie. I'll never forget your favour to me."

Humpty nodded his head with a smile. "Please don't say such things, Ruby. It's my pleasure."

"So, are you able to do what Charlie can do for me, Williams?” Ruby asked.

Zeke answered frankly, “I'm not sure. If you have a health certificate and comply with food safety standards, of course, I can arrange it for you. But if you meet neither of these requirements, I'm sorry, but I can't act against my conscience.”

“Hmph! I knew you'll turn out to be a loser since you were in school. As expected, you really didn't make a name for yourself even after growing up! What can you do when you can't even do such an easy thing?!” Ruby said scornfully.

Zeke replied, “I can fire this Humpty from the hospital.”

Pfft!

Humpty snickered. “Fire me? Do you think you're the director of the hospital?”

“I'm not, but the director of the hospital, Anderson, is my apprentice.”

After TCM Association director, Shawn Thompson, gave Heartland Hospital to Zeke, Zeke fired the former hospital director and appointed the assistant director, Anderson, to be the director.

As for Daniel, he was now on the hospital's board of directors.

Haha!

Humpty laughed even harder.

The director, Anderson, was now in his seventies, whereas Zeke was in his early twenties at most.

No one would believe that an old man was apprenticed to a younger man!

Ruby rolled her eyes at Zeke. “Still the same liar like you were in school.”

Having no choice, Zeke took out his phone and dialled Anderson's number.

“Anderson, where are you now?” Zeke asked.

Anderson replied, "I'm at the hospital, Master."

Zeke felt a little helpless as he didn't actually want to acknowledge Anderson as his apprentice, but Anderson was too enthusiastic and kept addressing him as 'Master'.

"A quick question, is the hospital cafeteria contracted to a Humpty?" Zeke asked.

"Yes, his full name is Charlie Hump."

Zeke proceeded to ask, "Do I have the rights to fire him? He publicly sells buttery hatches, which affects the normal competitive order of the cafeteria. He even wants to allow people without health certificates to work inside. His behaviour is quite deplorable."

"This hospital belongs to you, so of course, you have the rights to fire him," Anderson replied. "I'll call him right away."

"Alright."

After hanging up the phone, Zeke realized that everyone was giving him a strange look.

Then, a fit of laughter broke out.

"Haha. Am I hearing things? This young man is the master of an old man? Seriously?"

"The entire hospital even belongs to him?"

“This young man is so impetuous. Instead of working hard, he has to brag for vanity.”

“The old man on the phone just now must have been paid by him to pose as the hospital director as the voice of the actual director isn't like that.”

With a fake smile on his face, Humpty looked at Zeke and said, “If you were really talking to the hospital director on the phone, shouldn't the director call to inform me of my dismissal now?”

“Give him two minutes,” Zeke replied.

“I'll give you 30 minutes instead,” Humpty said indifferently. “You will leave Summer if he doesn't call.”

Zeke nodded his head. “No problem.”

After five minutes, Humpty still didn't receive any call.

The onlookers began to whisper to each other and mocked Zeke.

Getting a little impatient, Ruby said, “Well, I advise you to leave as soon as possible and not to make a fool of yourself, Zeke. Stop seeing my daughter from now on.”

Zeke frowned.

What's Anderson doing? Five minutes have passed,

but why has he not made the call?

Just as he was about to call Anderson, he received a call from him.

Zeke asked in a reproachful tone, "Why haven't you called him, Anderson?"

"Calm down, Mr. Williams." Anderson explained, "Humpty's phone has been suspended due to unpaid bills. So I can't reach him, but I've sent someone to get in touch with him."

Zeke replied, "Alright, I'll ask him to add credit to his phone. You can continue calling his number."

"Okay," Anderson said.

Putting away the phone, Zeke said to Humpty, "Your phone has been suspended due to unpaid bills, so the director can't reach you. You should reload your phone credit."

"Suspended?" Humpty sneered. "What a lame excuse you've come up with. I've just reloaded 100 bucks to my phone, how can it be suspended?"

Summer then said, "Let me try calling your phone now."

She took out her phone and dialed Humpty's number.
