

Apex Chapter 508

Chapter 508

The Woman Who Could Ignite Javier's Desire Geoffrey's disappearance had been kept under very tight wraps by the Whites, so many people did not know what had happened.

Coincidentally, this had happened while the Kerseys were having an internal strife, so everyone's focus had been diverted, allowing Geoffrey's escape to slip past them. When Piers found out that Renly had defied his instructions and sent his men after Geoffrey, only to realize that the entire island was surrounded by mines, he could not help but suck in a breath of cold air.

'He only did all this to stop us from pursuing him... But what if he were to try and destroy the Whites completely? 'By then, mines wouldn't be the only thing deployed. There'd be torpedoes too. He might release so many torpedoes that this entire island would get leveled.

'Has Geoffrey actually managed to come up with such a grand-scale scheme while he has been under house arrest over the past 20 years?' Piers was filled with disbelief and felt that his youngest son must have colluded with an extremely powerful force. Now, what Piers was most frightened of and worried about was that this force was the very same one who had been hiding in the dark for the longest time.

Hence, he decided to hold a meeting with the major families... Meanwhile, Javier was thinking about Arthur. Javier was sure that Arthur had already banded up with the very same enemy Piers was worried about, so he was pondering whether he would be able to find out who they were dealing with through Arthur's disappearance. But the moment Javier tried to have Arthur investigated, he realized that it was a dead-end with no valuable leads one could use.

On the contrary, it was Suzanne who gave him some good news. She said that she had managed to compensate for all of the experimental data lost in the previous fire. In fact, she has also pulled off a huge development regarding the AIDS' vaccine thanks to their latest experiments, which had been Suzanne's lifelong research. It was commonly known that AIDS was a terminal illness with an extremely high death rate. Anyone who contracted it would be able to do nothing besides wait for their mortal life to come to an end. After all, it was incurable.

Although the vaccine Suzanne was developing would not be able to cure Aids, it could prevent the virus from surfacing, which was already outstanding on its own. If this vaccine succeeded, all those injected with the vaccine would not have to worry about being diagnosed with AIDS, especially those with high-risk careers, including drug addicts and prostitutes. This alone was a strong enough marketing gimmick for Javier to earn huge profit from the vaccine.

However, at that moment, Suzanne had only managed to make a huge development in her research and had yet to produce the final product.

"Good work, Suzanne. I'm sure I wouldn't have been able to do half of what you've done even if there were 10 more men. So whatever it is that you want, I will do my best to support you. That includes giving you men. If you want, I could satisfy you right away."

At first, Suzanne felt pleased with what Javier had said, but when he made that last statement, her face instantly blushed from shyness. "Can't you be a little more serious? Don't you feel ashamed of always thinking about all sorts of nonsense?"

After criticizing Javier, Suzanne began to tell him about the new equipment she needed.

There was not much that she asked for, in fact. She needed equipment that could give her even more accurate results, equipment that needed to be imported, and equipment that Heinfensmirtz Inc. didn't have.

Still, this was not a difficult feat for Javier, who came from an omnipotent family. So long as what she wanted existed on the face of Earth, he would be able to find it for sure.

After promising that he would have it delivered within half a month, Javier looked at Suzanne's body and had a few thoughts.

But just as he was about to push her onto his bed, his cell phone rang...

Javier did not intend on picking up the phone initially, but upon seeing that it was the customized ringtone he used for the old fox, he hurriedly recomposed himself.

After all, the old fox would never call him unless it was something very important!